Sorry but I didn't get a chance to comment about the deer experiment in Southern Utah. I agree to Utah trying something different and limiting technology. I am all for rifles and muzzle loaders being without scopes. I am a fan of shortening seasons. I love Antler Point restrictions but realize you need to have alternating APRS to get desired results of growing mature deer. On even years make it 4-point or better and on odd years make it 3-point or less.

Do you have any additional comments about the elk unit plan updates? Across the board, I think the proposals are pretty good. The ranges that are listed all have adequate habitat for increases in elk numbers and the proposals all make sense. Separating Nebo and Manti is a great move as is the South Slope Units.

Nothing critical here but I do have one suggestion that I have might be worth considering on the next round of the Elk Plan Committee. Is there any reason why general any bull hunts are managed in the same plan as neighboring LE units? A couple of examples that come to mind are Beaver West and Oak Creek. They aren't being managed for the same quality/quantity of elk. In my mind, the plans should be separate to reflect differences so the division can make better informed decisions regarding both limited and general units. From my observations over the past 5-10 years, the fencing along I-15 has been effective in reducing the amount of elk crossing from the LE units to the general units and vice versa. Might be worth considering on other large units that have sub sections that are managed differently.
