I feel like overall, drought and loss of habitat have completely tanked the pheasant hunting. I feel like more money and cooperation with NWTF, state, and federal sources should be used to increase, dramatically, the turkey populations in the mountains instead of spending tens of thousands of dollars on released pheasant every fall. Turkey have a way higher survival rate post-release than do pheasant, and their habitat is far less threatened.

If turkey are such a nuisance why don't we allow harvest of females during spring as well? We could replicate the fall hunt rules for the spring hunts, do a single hunters choice tag for spring hunts, or have a 1 bearded turkey and 1 beardless turkey tag.

Do you have any additional comments about these recommendations? I support efforts to decrease harvest of tom turkeys during the fall season so that they are available for spring hunters.

I would like to see more Opportunity on the wildlife management areas for pheasants it seems like they're really overcrowded and very few birds turned out for the hunters to hunt

my comment on this is in regard to the fall turkey hunts on the oquirrh/standsby unit i realize the hunt opportunity is important but when it decrements the total population its time to rethink this situation. i do realize that there are indeed problem areas in the state were a fall hunt is warranted but not when there is no harm being done. what i am speaking of is directly related to the population in the opher canyon flock which is down as we speak to less than 20 birds and the soldier canyon flock of stockton which has also being going down hill since the fall hunt. neither of these two particular flocks are doing habitat damage. are for that matter any kind of damage i live there and have been monitoring these two flock intensely as i lived in stockton for over 70 years i just do not see the need for a fall hunt on them in fact if indeed it does keep up we will lose the opher flock for sure since i have only seen 2 jakes and 1 tom and i have been observing them continually since last winter the soldier canyon flock is doing alot better but know one is complaining about them so why have a depredation hunt any time you want to contact me about these flocks please so so
